^①Some time ago, scientists carried out a simple experiment on a barracuda, a large predatory fish well known for its violent behavior. ^②They put a barracuda into a big aquarium with some small fish called mackerel.

^③As they expected, the hungry barracuda attacked the mackerel. ^④But the scientists placed a glass panel between them to see what would happen to them.

^⑤Not noticing there was a glass panel, the barracuda tried to attack the mackerel in vain again and again. ^⑥After bumping its nose repeatedly, the barracuda finally quit trying.

^⑦Then, the barrier was removed. ^⑧Interestingly, thereafter, the barracuda would swim only to where the barrier had been and stop. ^⑨It believed that the glass panel was still there!

^⑩Just like the barracuda, many people stop trying after experiencing failure. ^⑪This fear limits our growth even though failure is often a step toward success.
